

Water management related internship opportunity at the NICC Foundation

Are you familiar with topics related to agriculture, water management or developmental studies? Would you like to learn more on how past generations handled international cooperation and development issues? Would you like to document the past while highlighting the current challenges of climate change, poverty, and resource depletion?

Then it's you we're looking for!

The organisation

The NICC foundation or Netherlands International Cooperation Collection is a non-profit organisation concerned with the preservation and documentation of international cooperation history. The main aim of our work is to make this history accessible to future generations of development professionals. But it's more than that, it's to set past projects in the right context, to pass on the lessons learned from these projects, to connect people and promote discussion and lastly to provide a forum for discussing our current challenges as a society.

What

Timelines at the NICC describe the historic milestones of a narrative, bilateral cooperation or any other international cooperation and development project. They are our main vessels to provide information to anyone interested and to create interest. A timeline itself gets created by interviewing relevant experts and consulting various information sources. The larger effort surrounding timeline creation also includes planning meetings, coordination within the organisation and promoting timelines or topics via social media or via webinars. In short, it requires (but also offers the opportunity to learn!) a variety of different skills. We are specifically looking for someone to help construct our new timeline on sustainable water management and rainwater harvesting.

When/where

We are offering an internship for a 4 month period (starting anywhere between June and October, open to negotiation). Where you can contribute, in a variety of ways, to the creation and promotion of our timelines. The offices are based in Den Haag. However due to Covid-19 restrictions all work will be done online at least until restrictions loosen up.

Are you interested or do have questions? Don't hesitate to contact us at water@stichtingnicc.nl

More information? Check out our organisation and timelines at www.stichtingnicc.nl

